Abstract

Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems among a sample of the general population of the United Kingdom. Methods: Data were obtained from the 2007 British National Survey of Mental Health and Wellbeing, a nationally representative cross-sectional survey of the adult population of Great Britain. Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 17.1% (95% CI 16.2–18.0). The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher among females than males (18.8% vs. 15.4%,  $p = 0.001$ ). The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher among those aged 16–24 years than those aged 25–34 years (21.1% vs. 16.1%,  $p = 0.001$ ). The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher among those living in urban areas than those living in rural areas (18.8% vs. 15.4%,  $p = 0.001$ ). Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems is high in the United Kingdom. The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems is higher among females than males, among those aged 16–24 years than those aged 25–34 years, and among those living in urban areas than those living in rural areas.

Interpretation: The interpretation of results does not depend on the direction of the relationship. The relationship between the variables is significant, if the relationship is significant in both directions.

Significance: The significance of the relationship is determined by the p-value. The p-value is the probability of observing a relationship as strong as the one observed, if the null hypothesis is true. The p-value is compared to the significance level (alpha) to determine if the relationship is significant. If the p-value is less than the significance level, the relationship is considered significant.

Effect size: The effect size is a measure of the strength of the relationship. It is calculated using the coefficient of determination ( $R^2$ ). The effect size is interpreted as follows: 0.01 to 0.09 is small, 0.10 to 0.29 is medium, and 0.30 or greater is large.

Conclusion: The results of the regression analysis indicate that there is a significant positive relationship between the variables. The relationship is significant at the 0.05 level. The effect size is medium to large.
