Some people run as a hobby, to get in better shape, or because they enjoy the social aspect of group running. I run for competition. As a cross country and track athlete, it may not be surprising that the way I get in better shape is primarily by running. However, not all training runs provide the same improvements to my body. To get the most out of my weekly training, my workouts involve a varied mix of runs. They include speed workouts, tempo runs, and long-distance runs. While I like elements of all my training runs, the positive mental effect, known as a runner's high, that I experience only during my long runs is so enjoyable that it makes the long run my favorite type of training run.

Deciding that my long runs were my favorite type of training run was not a quick and easy decision. To choose my favorite, I used six meaningful criteria involving the physical and mental effects I experience during each run. Over the seven years and thousands of hours I have run for competition, I have found that the criteria that matter the most to me during training are duration, comfort, boredom, training effect, risk of injury, and the mental effect.

Beginning with duration, a run that interferes excessively with my free time is frustrating and would not my favorite. I do not mind setting aside the 10-12 hours per week that training takes; however, I admit that I like to do things other than just run, so I prefer the training runs that do not take up all my free time. My shortest runs are my speed and tempo runs, which I do after school, and which take only about 45 minutes to an hour to complete. These runs are a
