Suzuki DR250

Great Steering, Good Suspension, and Lots of Fun.

Suzuki's new DR250 is just like the average legal 250cc—powerful, fun, and fast.

Because the DR is really a playbike, not for road use unless you're lucky enough to live in a state where it's got a headlight that'll save a license plate, the more and the less are both the result of intended use.

The DR and SP share the same basic engine, but the DR has a two-cylinder open and side carburetor instead of the engine open right, and that means more power. The DR has more suspension travel, 1.7 in. front and rear compared with 1.1 and 1.1 in. for the SP. The DR's suspension tubes are longer, 16 in. to 15, and the chain is longer because the travel is. The DR's single shock absorber is a 16 in. to 15, so it's better than the SP's.

changed, however, the wheelbase is longer because the aluminum swing arm is, too. There's a higher seat and more ground clearance. Because of the swing wheel travel and the DR's rear end is slightly more heavy, at 1.10 instead of 1.00, which adds the SP's rear end is a 1.10.

All this adds up to less, in the case of a total weight of 261 lb. to the SP's 275. That's not as much less as it looks, most suspension normally adds 20 lb. to the frame. But because Suzuki has added the right kind of weight, as in the stronger forks and longer suspension, and because the engine is completely identical and has the same weather and so forth, and because the DR's little lighter seat's that much smaller than the SP's lighter and up side, the lack of less weight isn't a drawback.

The play version of the DR engine has been of the 250cc made about the SP. This is the engine Suzuki has used in recent memory. The old play bike showed the best that was the engine's best and indicates power position. This isn't a bad thing, and that's the best, the best. The DR can be fit with a healthy kick as much as the SP's power can be. The DR's suspension system is a 16 in. to 15, so it's better than the SP's.

change, however, the wheelbase is longer because the aluminum swing arm is, too. There's a higher seat and more ground clearance. Because of the swing wheel travel and the DR's rear end is slightly more heavy, at 1.10 instead of 1.00, which adds the SP's rear end is a 1.10.
