

CASE BRIEF

How to Write a Case Brief

Here is a sample brief of the case of Eric J. v. Betty M. (Cal. Appellate Case 1999), which you read for homework 1. Note that Facts and Rationale make up the bulk of the case brief. The facts have been retold in the author's own words. Not all facts were recited. The Rationale explains the court's holding and what it means as a rule of law. It cites the case law as well as the public policy that the court applied. The Rationale also explains how the court dealt with a possible contrary case.

Facts

Robert brought home his new girlfriend, Helen, and her eight-year-old son, Eric, to meet his mother, father, brothers, and sister and their spouses. The relationship between Robert and Helen continued and Helen and Eric were guests several times in different family homes. No family member told Helen about Robert's criminal history of felony child molestation. It was later discovered that Robert sexually molested Eric during some of these visits at the family homes all the while Robert was on parole for child molestation. Robert was convicted of molesting Eric and sent back to prison. Helen filed suit against Robert's family claiming they had a duty to warn her about Robert's criminal past and the potential danger to her child, and failing that duty they were liable for money damages for the harm suffered by Eric. The trial court dismissed the case on a nonsuit motion.

Issue

Whether the trial court properly dismissed the negligence claim based on the premise that family members of a convicted child molester have no affirmative duty to disclose that information to the molester's girlfriend who has an eight-year-old boy.

Holding

The appellate court affirmed the trial court, holding that the family members had no affirmative duty to disclose the information.

Rationale

The appellate court placed great weight upon the "no duty to aid" rule, developed "over the centuries" in courts. The court noted that a special relationship is required to
