Manufacturing Process: Steel and Aluminum. Steel and aluminum are the primary materials used in the production of steel reinforcement bars. The steel is produced by melting iron and carbon in a blast furnace, followed by refining in a basic oxygen furnace. The aluminum is produced by melting bauxite in a Hall-Héroult process. The resulting molten metal is then cast into continuous slabs or blooms. These are then rolled into the desired shapes, such as bars, plates, and sheets. The final products are then finished by pickling and oiling to prevent corrosion.
