Izmeth,2017-06-26 Research Paper postgraduate from the year 2016 in the subject Communications Public Relations Advertising Marketing Social Media grade 3 75 course Masters in IT language English abstract This research is inspired by the result of the works of Professor Tetlock on prediction science in the geopolitical and economics domains He suggests that some non experts are better than experts in predicting the future This research attempts to identify if a group of individuals with high prediction skill exists in the general public by testing on ad testing surveys Modern businesses spend billions of dollars on branding and advertising of their products Ad testing is commonly used as a tool to gauge the success and effectiveness of such campaigns A problem faced by ad testing surveys is that the main campaign has to be kept on hold until the survey data is collected Usually larger the sample size the longer the delay If a smaller group of forecasters are able to predict the opinion of a larger sample the delay faced in ad testing surveys could be minimized Data from a prediction survey collected from 659 subjects living in the UK who predicted the best ads from set of 16 ad pairs were analyzed in this research The analysis found that few individuals were able to predict more successfully and with greater confidence than others Nonetheless more research in the same domain with greater vigor is needed to fortify the claim The London Corn
