

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods and quantities are free to flow across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various international trade agreements, which are driving the world. Examples of these include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) among others.

However, there are some countries that are not fully open to international trade. They have some trade barriers in place to protect their industries. In fact, in the United States, there are some industries that are protected from foreign competition. The government imposes trade barriers to protect domestic industries. These are called trade barriers or trade restrictions. There are two main types of trade barriers: tariffs and non-tariff barriers. Tariffs are taxes on imports and exports. Non-tariff barriers are other measures that restrict trade, such as quotas, subsidies, and technical barriers to trade.

International Trade

It shows that when international trade is free, the total supply of the product is the sum of the domestic supply and the foreign supply. The world price is P_2 , and the quantity demanded is Q_2 . The domestic supply is Q_3 , and the foreign supply is $Q_2 - Q_3$. The domestic supply is Q_3 , and the foreign supply is $Q_2 - Q_3$.
