

Comparison of ISTQB vs ISEB Software Testing Qualifications

What's the difference?

This article aims to compare the ISEB and ISTQB Certification schemes for Software Testing. We will also outline the content and structure of the certifications, and demonstrate the link between them.

This document provides important information for those who already have the ISTQB or ISEB Foundation qualification and need to choose the next step.

ISTQB & ISTQB Certification Scheme Structures

The foundation levels of both certifications are transferable as ISEB have adopted the syllabus from the ISTQB Foundation level. This situation is a positive as it provides the candidate with alternative options [i.e. once a candidate has completed the Foundation level, he/she can choose to start either certification].

Once the Foundation level is complete the differences between the certifications become clear, ISEB has an intermediate level preceding its practitioner level, while the ISTQB syllabus does not.

Both certifications changed in 2008, with the schemes having a new structure, composition and order in which students attend and sit the examinations. We have outlined both qualifications below:

The ISTQB Advanced Course in Software Testing Overview

The ISTQB was founded as an International Software Testing Qualifications Board in Edinburgh in November 2002. The ISTQB's role is to support a single, universally accepted, international qualification scheme, by providing the core syllabi and by setting guidelines for accreditation and examination for national boards.

The International Software Testing Qualification Board (ISTQB) is a fast growing and democratic organisation which is made up of an assembly of member boards, with each board representing major software and system developing countries and regions. There are currently 45 member boards, the Irish Software Testing Board (ISTB) is the member board for Ireland.
