Griffin,2011-11-23 From infant memories in a heavily bombed post war naval city to the sudden upheaval and arrival in a resin scented traditional Highland glen the boy experienced a steep learning curve It was however to quickly become a part of his nature as he wandered alone observing and empathising with the wild creatures then engaging in the manual skills of survival where technology was still a distant idea Biddable in behaviour because of childhood and army training but a rebel by nature the author wanders through his life experiences which would make Health and Safety quail and the politically correct throw up their hands in horror but he has recorded the way of life in order that his grandchildren will have a history
