Students' Britannica India: Select essays ,2000 Makers and Shapers Shereen Ratnagar,2007 This is a study of technology as self help endeavor in the home and the provisioning of the household as work in the rural workshop that supplies pots or iron tools for the village and as techniques mastered in the urban workshop feasible not in simple tribal villages but when new production institutions emerge with the development of a political hierarchy It travels from the agricultural field to the building of the home with its food processing and storage facilities to urban water supply techniques and transport mechanisms to the use of stone bronze and iron for tools and weapons A glimpse is afforded of the difference between the making of pottery by hand and the use of the potter s wheel The social circumstances required of pottery production are in turn contrasted with those required of metallurgy The whole is based on the archaeological evidence of the Neolithic to Iron Age cultures of South Asia and concurrently on observations of some technological processes followed by villagers today The book asks if it is the nature of tools available that could have made possible the use of materials such as certain semi precious stones or ivory Which were the craft technologies that depended on bronze tools in the Indus cities Else it may have been horse riding that prompted chiefs of southern India to sponsor the production of new kinds of iron weapons It is besides possible that the charcoal requirements of early iron smelting and forging are connected with localized deforestation and that this had a role to play in the organization and dispersal of the industry Why were masonry wells so rare after the Indus Valley civilization Why is glass production known in the Bronze Age of Western Asia but in the Iron Age of South Asia In what economic circumstances did people begin to use wheeled transport Technology is not viewed here as a self generating phenomenon Instead puzzles are explained by social and economic factors such as the nature of the work group and the resultant production process and by political structures as well The Image of India Григорий
