Question 11 Model Answer (full marks)

According to Text B, Lyuba is a remarkable specimen because she is one of a kind: almost flawlessly preserved in ice for tens of thousands of years. She was discovered by chance by a reindeer herder who ensured her continued preservation by informing the correct authorities so that scientists were able to delicately recover her remains.

Through studying Lyuba, scientists were hoping to discover her cause of death and in general gain a stronger understanding of the species. Furthermore, scientists were keen to learn about living conditions during the Ice Age and more information about climate change. They also wanted to deduce where she came from and explore the mysteries of her DNA.

Question 2d Model Answer (full marks)

The general effect is that of a powerful, mesmerising creature that is out of place in the city. The phrase "swaying, swaying up the street" creates an image of a perpetual, steady movement, emphasising the elephant's momentum. The writer also uses sibilance to highlight the rhythm and the great swishing of its limbs. The simile "drawing it away from us like a tide" portrays the power and force of the elephant, like an uncontrollable tide. The elephant appears to be a victim of its own momentum, as its own movements are "drawing it away", which conveys that its force is so great, it cannot fully control it. The narrator describes the "thing" letting out a "deep groan". The noun "thing" shows how the elephant is out of place and unusual, and the phrase "deep groan" aurally illustrates the suffering and pain of the creature.

In paragraph 12, the writer creates an overall effect of a majestic yet downtrodden animal. Its "big-lidded eyes" portray a sad, tired creature with the large eyes evoking sympathy from the reader. The narrator describes the elephant's "dry folds of skin" which creates an image of an elderly, pitiable animal, perhaps not receiving the care it needs. The simile, "dragged its curled trunk like a fist along the ground", depicts a defensive and dejected animal, losing its fighting spirit. As the trunk is "curled", this may portray defensiveness, implying the animal feels vulnerable or has been hurt in the past. By "dragging" its trunk "along the ground" the reader is given the impression of a morose, exhausted creature, close to giving up.
