MG TC s and TF s I never saw a TD for many years There might be fewer in Australia than the other T series as most went to USA Used to admire the MG s and got to know some of the people One was another teacher who had a TF I had about enough money to think about buying a car Some of that was compensation for my deafness That had happened a couple of years earlier There was one owner wanted to sell his TC It looked great in pale blue with cycle guards and it went well too So I thought I d buy it for my first car Then I made a mistake I went home and told dad He thought I d kill myself in one of those Next thing I knew I was the owner of a 1954 FJ Holden It was cream with brown upholstery I also had to get my licence So I went for that the next day but had a minor bingle and failed the test Went back the following day and passed Haven t times changed After four months of driving the FJ I knew if I kept that car much longer I really would kill myself They just couldn t handle The motor was OK but it leant over at alarming angles when cornering It had too much power for the chassis That s why people used to put sandbags in the boot The rough roads didn t help either So I bought my first MG a 1954 TF I showed it to my dad after I took delivery This was the first of six MG s I have owned I enjoyed driving the TF but became attracted to the idea of additional power So a year later I traded it on an Austin Healey 100 Although there were only three gears it had overdrive A flick of the switch and the Healey and I were overtaking However there was a penalty for that power It wasn t long before I had four worn tyres In addition the car had a fatal flaw just as the FJ Holden did It could handle all right BUT it was far too low The underneath of the car would scrape roads and gutters everywhere Except on the highway So it was time for another MG This time I swapped the Healey for an MG TF which was in immaculate condition It was a 1500cc model too Although you d need a stopwatch to tell the difference from the 1250cc version I had this car for a number of years using it as my daily driver Eventually there was a blown motor That was the end of my MG motoring for many years My next MG is another story though Because that purchase also was the beginning of a car club
