

Of Mice and Men Literary Analysis

Picture one dream you have for yourself. Imagine having to abandon that dream for an inexplicable or unfair reason and instead live in a constant state of loneliness and alienation where you are treated like nothing more than an object. John Steinbeck examines these issues of discrimination and alienation realistically as they relate to gender equality through his novella Of Mice and Men. Set during the Great Depression in the 1930's, the ADJ plot follows the intricate friendship of George and Lennie as they begin working on a ranch in central California. Within the novel, discrimination and unethical treatment of women is addressed by Curley's wife. John Steinbeck uses the discrimination of Curley's wife in his novel, Of Mice and Men, to depict the theme of alienation. Through a female character, one who is not even given a name, Steinbeck criticizes the American society for its disenfranchisement of women and its relegation of unworthy or gender specific roles through Curley's wife's words and actions.

Steinbeck prominently displays the oppression of women by simply only referring to her as "Curley's wife," but more so through the extensive objectification of Curley's wife, stripping her of _____. For example, by referring to the only female as the bride of a male, Steinbeck shows Curley's wife as only an extension of Curley, not an individual person; she has no personal identity. Furthermore, through the use of the possessive noun, "Curley's," Steinbeck further exaggerates Curley's ownership. This is important because readers are forced to relate to her through Curley; all of her "power" comes from the ranch workers' fear of Curley. An example of this is when Curley's wife goes to Crooks bunk to ask for Curley's whereabouts, Crooks says "Maybe you better go along to your own house now. We don't want no trouble" (84). In addition, Steinbeck describes Curley's wife by stating "She had full, rouged lips and wide-spaced eyes, heavily made up. Her fingernails were red. Her hair hung in little rolled clusters, like sausages" (34). Steinbeck utilizes the rhetorical technique of omitting details to portray Curley's wife as strictly an object with a focus on looks, and no personality traits. Curley's wife's red proactive clothing and accessories combined with her "heavily made up" look makes the reader assume that Curley's wife is one who is artificial and values aesthetics over personality.

She is merely the spouse of Curley as far as all of the men in the ranch are concerned. "They are only forced to relate to her through Curley; if they fear him or want no trouble, the men will stay away from her. George, for example, has set goals in his mind that he is committed , thus he will stay away from her in order not to get into any trouble. ON the other hand, if they do not fear anyone, they can enjoy their time with the intention of forming a physical relationship with her. L
