These data suggest that the use of the word "community" is not a simple matter of semantics. It is a complex process that involves the negotiation of power and the construction of social reality. The use of the word "community" can be a way of asserting power and control over a group of people, or it can be a way of creating a sense of belonging and shared identity. The use of the word "community" can also be a way of masking the power and control of a dominant group, or it can be a way of challenging the power and control of a dominant group. The use of the word "community" is a complex and contested process that reflects the power and control of a dominant group.
