Preparing for a Global Community: Achieving an International Perspective in Higher Education Sarah M. Pickert, 1992-03-13 This report discusses the response of colleges and universities in the United States to the need of graduate students to become equipped to make personal and public policy decisions as citizens of an international society. Curriculum changes are showing a tightening of foreign language standards in schools of higher education and throughout the curriculum, faculty are including material from other countries and advances in computer and satellite communication to enhance the international experience without leaving the classroom. Additionally, the international focus on higher education has been boosted through a major U.S. initiative that tripled federal spending on undergraduate study abroad. The United States is also cooperating with foreign representatives in working with the Economic Community and the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization to standardize educational credential reporting, licensing and certification. Governments are also looking with increased regulatory fervor upon joint educational business ventures. Steps that faculty and administrators can take to improve international education on their campuses are explored, including widening the curriculum to expose students to other cultures, widening opportunities for international contact and evaluating organizational structures that help or hinder international activities. Contains approximately 200 references and an index. The Reader includes expert essays on urban informality, bottom-up economies and informal architectures as harbingers of social and political change. Offering a global perspective on the conflicted realities of informal marketplaces, from survival activities of the urban poor to transnational clandestine trade networks, these analyses reveal how informality has become a political instrument in the struggles around global market integration. Choice, 2008 Consumer Behavior James F.
