

You recently delivered a presentation to your team, which shared ideas on how to support new joiners with settling into life at RSM. Following the presentation, your manager invites you to deliver a summary of this to one of RSM's partners.

Half way through the presentation to the partner, you notice that they look disengaged. You don't have a lot of time left, but you want to make sure they take on board your recommendations.

What do you do?

By dragging and dropping, please RANK ORDER the options below, with 1 being what you are most likely to do and 5 being what you are least likely to do:

1

A

Pause and invite your manager, who has extra experience in this topic, to speak and support you in the presentation.

...

2

B

Proceed in your usual style and adjust your language to explain the information in a different way. It's important to adjust to the partner's preferences.

...

3

C

Continue to report back the information to the partner as planned. You want to make sure there is complete consistency in your approach as your presentation and ideas were received well previously.

...

4

D

Amend your usual style and watch out for signs that the partner is engaged. Then adjust your style accordingly to maintain their interest.

...

5

E

Make minor tweaks to your phrasing and language where you think it will make the biggest difference for their understanding. However, you want to remain as consistent as possible.
