i. Background information:

This section provides a brief history and background of the research topic, discussing previous research in the area and outlining any key concepts or theories that will be used in the study.

ii. Research Gap:

A research gap refers to a problem or issue in a field of study that has not yet been adequately addressed by existing research. It can also refer to a question that has not yet been answered or a topic that has not been explored in depth. Identifying research gaps is an important part of the research process, as it helps researchers to determine the scope and focus of their study, and to identify potential areas for further investigation. Research gaps can be identified through a variety of methods, including literature reviews, surveys of experts in the field, and analysis of existing data. Research gaps are important because they indicate areas of research that are ripe for exploration and can help guide future research efforts. By addressing research gaps, researchers can contribute to the development of new theories, methods, and approaches, and advance knowledge in their field.
