

Experiments of Hydraulic Level Measurement

EXPERIMENT 1 OF 4

Level measurement of bridges is achieved 3 months in order to ensure constant measurement results for railway safety. Other differences, therefore, beyond the determination of an average by 10, the mean constant average measurement must be obtained. The purpose of this experiment is to demonstrate the variation of this technique.

The diagram method involves a process measuring different sections within the span of the bridge for varying measurement level readings.

The second method is measurement using a bridge system and measuring the level position for the bridge span.

EXPERIMENT 2 OF 4

1. Measurement method of measuring pressure readings across the level of liquid in a tank.
2. Measure the effect that the location of the measuring device has on the measured level reading.
3. Constructive bridge system measurement of 10' liquid in a tank.
4. Measure the effect that the measurement device of the bridge system has on the measured level reading.
5. Constructive measurement of the bridge.
