Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 30 women, aged 45-65, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of walking for 30 minutes, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 to 3.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their usual level of activity. The study was conducted over a 12-week period. The participants in the walking program showed significant improvements in physical fitness, including increases in heart rate, blood pressure, and body weight. They also showed significant improvements in psychological health, including decreases in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a low-intensity, supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
