

Lesson 4

The Water Budget

Stick in your copy of the water budget and then add the labels.

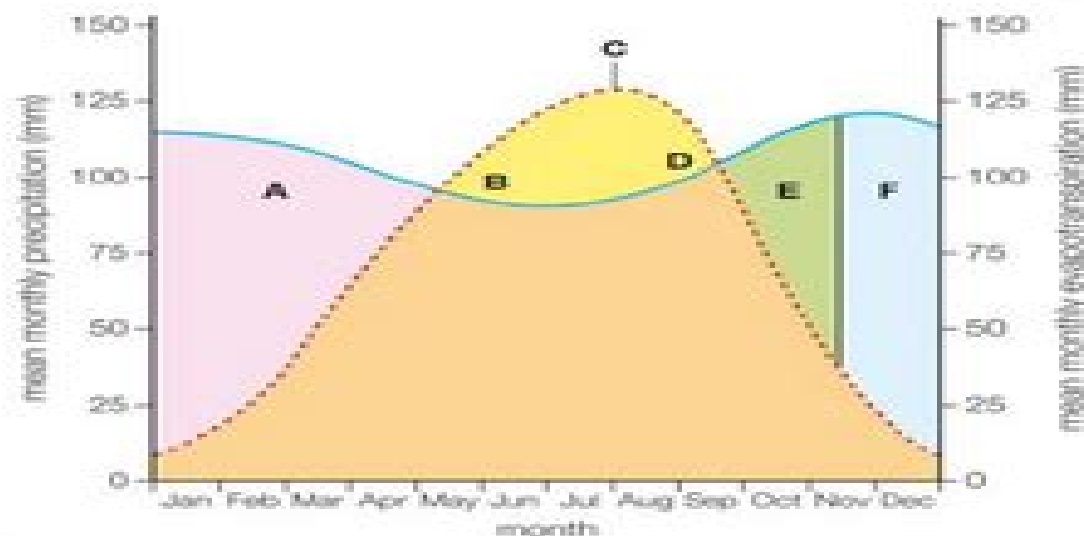

Figure 2 The components of a water budget – the annual budget graph for a temperate climate like that of the UK.

Precipitation exceeds potential evapotranspiration (PE). Soil water is full with a soil moisture surplus for plants, runoff and groundwater recharge.

Precipitation exceeds PE. Soil moisture is recharged.

Deficiency of soil moisture, as the store is used up, PE exceeds precipitation. Plants must adapt to survive and crops need irrigation.

Potential evapotranspiration exceeds precipitation. Soil moisture is used up by plants, or lost by evaporation (called soil moisture utilisation).

Soil moisture store is now used up. Precipitation is likely to be absorbed by soil, rather than produce runoff. River levels will fall or dry up completely.

Soil moisture is now full. Field capacity is reached. Additional rainfall will percolate to the water table, and groundwater stores will be recharged.
