Short question

5. List the four main components of the government or public sector in South Africa.

National government, provincial government, local government, public corporations.

6. List and briefly discuss the main ways in which government spending can be financed.

Government spending can basically be financed through taxation and borrowing. As far as borrowing is concerned, there are essentially three types: domestic borrowing in the capital markets, foreign borrowing and borrowing from the South African Reserve Bank. The latter option is avoided as far as possible since it is regarded as inflationary financing.

7. Explain the difference between progressive, proportional and regressive taxes and give an example of each type.

A progressive tax: A tax is progressive if the ratio of the tax paid to taxable income (that is, the average tax rate) increases as taxable income increases. The classic example in South Africa is personal income tax. Taxpayers with a higher income generally pay a higher proportion (or percentage) of their income in tax.

A proportional tax: This is where the average tax rate remains unchanged when taxable income changes. All taxpayers thus pay the same average tax rate. The classic South African example is the company tax. All companies pay the same percentage of their profit (the taxable income) in tax.

A regressive tax: This is where the ratio of tax paid to taxable income (that is, the average tax rate) increases as income decreases (or decreases as income increases), with VAT as a good example.

8. Give two valid reasons for government intervention in the South African economy

To correct market failure (that is, where markets do not produce efficient outcomes). To try to achieve equitable outcomes (something markets are not very good at). To achieve macroeconomic stability (given the tendency of markets to create instability).
