23. According to Carville Fierke, what did he experience in his business dealings that got him started on the road?

Interviewing for Charles in Florida: the teacher spent the first six weeks preparing for what might come in the field, and he collected the material.

1. Which statements are not major subjects that affect all nations (at least in some degree)?

These authors acknowledged that female life was jeopardized when human activities like fishing polluted and degraded coastal and adjacent estuarine and marine. They realized that such results would threaten the key source of protein for many of the people who live in these coastal areas. They concluded, therefore, that the coastal zone was a place where coastal fisheries provided food security that was not found in the inland zone. They concluded that women were the main beneficiaries of coastal fisheries and that women should be the main decision-makers in the fishery sector.
