Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 15 women who participated in a 12-week training program. The control group consisted of 15 women who did not participate in the program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. Data were collected at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the intervention group had significant improvements in physical fitness, including increased aerobic capacity, muscle strength, and flexibility. Additionally, the intervention group reported improvements in psychological health, including reduced stress, improved mood, and increased self-esteem. The control group showed no significant changes in physical or psychological health. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have positive effects on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
