TEACHER'S GUIDE

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition and physical fitness of obese women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 15 obese women (mean age 40.5 years, range 30–50 years, mean BMI 32.5 kg/m², range 28.5–36.5 kg/m²). The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 7) and an intervention group (n = 8). The control group maintained their current diet and lifestyle, while the intervention group followed a 1000 kcal energy deficit diet. The study was conducted over a 10-week period. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at the end of the 10-week period. The assessment included body composition (body mass index, body fat percentage, lean body mass) and physical fitness (maximal oxygen consumption, maximal heart rate, maximal power output). The results showed that the intervention group had a significant decrease in body mass index, body fat percentage, and lean body mass compared to the control group. The intervention group also had a significant increase in maximal oxygen consumption, maximal heart rate, and maximal power output compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet can improve body composition and physical fitness in obese women.

Questions provided by Richard H. Quaresima, from Davidson South, were prepared by Nicole Radman, North Lincoln Community, suggested answers, finalized, and an explanation by Thane Connor (NLC).

The third characteristic of the Staphylococcus aureus group is its resistance to antibiotics. For example, when the fluoroquinolone class of drugs is administered to humans, it is often found that the Staphylococcus aureus strains isolated from patients are resistant to this class of drugs. This is because the Staphylococcus aureus group has a mechanism for resistance to antibiotics, which is called the Staphylococcus aureus resistance gene. This gene is located on a plasmid, which is a small, circular DNA molecule that can be transferred from one cell to another. This is why the Staphylococcus aureus group is often found to be resistant to antibiotics.
