Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city in Brazil. The participants were 30 elderly people (mean age = 68.5 years) who were randomly divided into two groups: a control group (CG) and an exercise group (EG). The EG performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The CG did not perform any exercise. The physical fitness and HRQL were assessed at baseline and at the end of the 12-week program. The results showed that the EG had significant improvements in physical fitness and HRQL compared to the CG. The improvements in physical fitness were observed in the 1000-m walk test, 6-min walk test, and sit-to-stand test. The improvements in HRQL were observed in the physical function, role limitations due to physical problems, and overall HRQL domains. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of elderly people.
