

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import policies, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have free trade across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various international trade wars, with significant changes during the 1990s. Examples of these wars include the United States–Mexico Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the United States–European Community (EC) Trade Agreement (WTO), and the European Community–Japan Economic Partnership Agreement.

However, barriers that come within the economic definition exist even in free trade that would prevent goods from being traded. In addition, in Figure 10, a free trade line does represent the domestic free economy, as neither the consumption nor production decisions are being improved. The domestic supply curve indicates domestic suppliers are willing and able to produce at other prices, prices of those resources. Importation for domestic consumption has to be higher in the equilibrium price structure. Exportation of domestic goods, if, could be produced only by domestic firms.

International Trade

It shows in free international trade the Total Supply curve represents the production for domestic consumption (price P_1 , quantity Q_1), domestic supply (price P_3 , quantity Q_3). There are also the domestic demand curve (price P_2 , quantity Q_2). Also at P_2 , domestic firms are producing Q_3 and foreign producers are producing $Q_2 - Q_3$. Thus, domestic firms are producing less under free trade, whereas foreign firms are producing less under free trade.
