Non-Healthcare Professionals

Non-healthcare professionals are individuals who are not licensed to practice medicine, nursing, pharmacy, dentistry, or other health professions. They are often employed in health care settings, such as hospitals, clinics, and long-term care facilities, and may perform tasks that are related to patient care, such as taking vital signs, administering medications, and providing patient education. They may also be involved in research, teaching, and other health care activities. The term "non-healthcare professional" is often used to describe individuals who are not licensed to practice a health profession, but who are still involved in health care activities. This term is used to distinguish these individuals from those who are licensed to practice a health profession, such as doctors, nurses, and pharmacists. The term "non-healthcare professional" is also used to describe individuals who are not licensed to practice a health profession, but who are still involved in health care activities, such as taking vital signs, administering medications, and providing patient education.
