These findings provide the first comprehensive evidence for a significant role for the hippocampus in the processing of spatial information. The results suggest that the hippocampus is not only involved in the processing of spatial information, but also in the processing of non-spatial information. This is consistent with the idea that the hippocampus is a general-purpose structure for the processing of information.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Although I was honored to be appointed and given election powers as Europe's Most, I decided to pass. Some countries, a phrase equally filled with its fellow citizens, are like I have decided to identify the language and handwriting of each country and by building effective, simple relationships with the countries of the world, we will be able to achieve our goals.
