Prospects and Applications for Plant-Associated Microbes, A laboratory manual Seppo Sorvari, Anna Maria Pirttilä, 2014-12-15 Research on the microbial colonization of the aerial and subterranean tissues of plants has shown an extensive scale of interactions between the hosts and a range of microbes including bacteria and fungi Intercellular spaces vascular systems and even single cells can be inhabited by these endophytic microbes Of the bacterial endophytes only a small percentage is harmful to the plant most are neutral opportunistic or beneficial These plant based bacteria can have various important functions throughout the life cycle of the plant some promote plant growth and development others protect the plant from diseases This ability to be able to protect plants from diseases has catalyzed numerous laboratories to search for new bacteria that could be utilized instead of the traditional plant protective agents Because two or more interacting organisms are involved research and the eventual application of suitable bio controlling microbes are challenging and often require specific skills and equipment The purpose of this book is to provide a comprehensive review for those who are interested in the research and biotechnological applications of plant associated bacteria It also provides a compilation of current work conducted on plant bacteria interactions

The Assembly and Interactions of MreB in the Maintenance of Cell Shape in Caulobacter Crescentus Natalie Anne Dye, 2010 This work focuses on the mechanism by which MreB contributes to the maintenance of cell shape in the gram negative alpha proteobacterium Caulobacter crescentus The gene mreB encodes a protein that resembles actin a eukaryotic cytoskeletal protein Previously it was shown that mreB is required to maintain a rod like shape and localizes to a helical pattern near the cytoplasmic membrane Here we show that MreB is associated with regions of active growth in Caulobacter as mutant strains that mislocalize MreB to the cell poles direct new growth at or near the poles We present evidence to suggest that MreB contributes to the determination of proper length width and curvature through partially distinct mechanisms The determination of proper width involves the essential proteins MreC and Pbp2 which are encoded in the mreB operon While MreB and MreC are both required to position the cell wall transpeptidase Pbp2 along the lateral sidewalls and away from midcell the two do not colocalize and each can maintain its localization in the absence of the other When MreB is mislocalized to the poles MreC and Pbp2 do not follow These data argue against the idea that MreB provides a scaffold like structure to localize enzymes that directly modify the cell wall The determination of proper curvature involves the intermediate filament like protein Crescentin We identify a putative binding site on MreB for Crescentin or other curvature mediating factors We also show that the extent to which the subcellular localization of MreB changes over the cell cycle is correlated with cell size indicating that MreB is involved in the coordination between elongation and division In addition we show that in vitro purified MreB spontaneously forms very stable polymers in the presence or absence of nucleotide These polymers are globular or amorphous and only filamentous when placed on a highly positively charged surface of Poly L lysine These in vitro data suggest that MreB is likely to be regulated at the disassembly step in the cell and that the cellular environment may influence the structure of MreB polymers Lastly we present biochemical evidence to support the existence of a disassembly factor in cytoplasmic Caulobacter extract Together our data suggest that the maintenance of the crescent rod cell shape in Caulobacter is the result of a complicated balance between MreB s dynamic subcellular localization polymeric structure and communication with cellular components Cancer Research ,2009-12
