National Forest Inventories Pathways For Common Reporting:

National Forest Inventories Erkki Tomppo, Thomas Gschwantner, Mark Lawrence, Ronald E. McRoberts, 2009-12-02 Forest inventories throughout the world have evolved gradually over time. The content as well as the concepts and definitions employed are constantly adapted to the users' needs. Advanced inventory systems have been established in many countries within Europe as well as outside Europe as a result of development work spanning several decades in some cases more than 100 years. With continuously increasing international agreements and commitments, the need for information has also grown drastically and reporting requests have become more frequent and the content of the reports wider. Some of the agreements made at the international level have direct impacts on national economies and international decisions e.g. the Kyoto Protocol. Thus it is of utmost importance that the forest information supplied is collected and analysed using sound scientific principles and that the information from different countries is comparable. European National Forest Inventory (NFI) teams gathered in Vienna in 2003 to discuss the new challenges and the measures needed to get data users to take full advantage of existing NFIs. As a result, the European National Forest Inventory Network (ENFIN), a network of NFIs, was established. The ENFIN members decided to apply for funding for meetings and collaborative activities. COST (European Cooperation in Science and Technology) provided the necessary financial means for the realization of the program.

National Forest Inventories Claude Vidal, Iciar A. Alberdi, Laura Hernández Mateo, John J. Redmond, 2016-11-24 The book presents the current state and good practices of national forest inventories in monitoring wood resources and demonstrates pathways for harmonisation and improved common reporting. Beyond a general overview over availability and use of wood resources in different countries, it provides a unique collection of original contributions from national forest inventory experts with in-depth descriptions of current NFI methods in assessing wood availability and wood use in European countries and selected countries from America and Asia. The main topics are national definitions and improvements in common reporting of forests available for wood supply, stem quality and assortments, estimation of change including growth and drain, and tree resources outside forest land. The book is a must-have for everyone who is contributing to national forest inventories either methodologically or operatively for people who want or need to understand national forest inventory, provided data and information on the availability of wood resources. By providing profound knowledge, it is a valuable basis for scientists involved in scenario modelling and analysing effects of climate change as well as individuals in private organisations and public administrations promoting the sustainable use of natural resources and the potential of green economy.

National Forest Inventories Erkki Tomppo, Thomas Gschwantner, Mark Lawrence, 2010 Traditionally, the purpose of National Forest Inventories (NFIs) has been to provide continuously updated information regarding the state of a given nation's forest resources, including their timber volumes, species composition, and sustainable development. But with increased international reporting requirements to the FAO, the ITTO, the UN's Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Ministerial Conference Protecting Forest in Europe, and other international bodies the potential role of how NFIs can accurately respond to these requirements has received some considerable attention Addressing the issue of how well countries are able to respond to current international reporting requirements this book discusses the importance of comparable reporting and the possible approaches for achieving comparability across Europe and globally It includes country status reports from 37 countries worldwide and it discusses methodologies and techniques for a common reporting system With its collection of inventories and detailed discussions on the current status and future needs of NFIs this book provides an invaluable resource for anyone involved in developing managing monitoring or contributing to forest inventories as well as to those who are researching or practising forest resource management
