Stenbakken, Amos Dolev, 1996 A high accuracy sampling wattmeter was developed at the National Institute of Standards and Technology NIST to investigate the feasibility of using waveform sampling techniques for making very accurate power measurements at frequencies from 50 Hz to 1000 Hz The goal of this effort was to develop an instrument having a full scale measurement uncertainty over these frequencies of less than 50 uW W The prototype instrument that came out of the development was used to demonstrate the accuracy achievable with the digital sampling method The new high accuracy sampling wattmeter was built around a wideband instrument developed earlier at NIST The new wattmeter uses 16 bit analog to digital A D converters and includes a two stage current transformer in one of the input modules This wattmeter operates with asynchronous sampling as did the previous wattmeter The high accuracy is achieved by approximately synchronizing the interval over which samples are taken with the period of the input signal Special care was taken to design input stages with a flat frequency response and low temperature sensitivity The wattmeter has been calibrated using the NIST Audio Frequency Power Bridge The two instruments agreed to better than 50 uW of full scale over the 50 Hz to 1000 Hz frequency range at a wide range of power factors
