

The Kite Runner

Themes, Characters & Relationships

Theme: Atonement – Character: Amir

The significance of Hassan's rape overshadowed Amir's life. The underlying inequality of their relationship, as a Pashtun and a Hazara, made Amir to see it as a "sacrifice".

Amir's guilt stems from his own shame – because he didn't admit to his sin and didn't tell anyone what happened.

First step to atonement: feeling remorse and acknowledging it.

When Amir saves Sohrab he can forgive himself and find the courage to declare that Hassan is his half-brother.

Catalyst: when Amir finally confronts Assef and gets the beating he was threatened with years ago.

We see the change in Amir's thinking as he no longer uses the cultural inequalities between ethnic groups as an excuse to explain his treatment of Hassan/Hazaras – the reversal of the line "for you a thousand times over" signifies that he has overcome history and religion to be indebted to Sohrab for saving his life, both physically and symbolically by giving him a chance to forgive himself.

As a child: what are the driving forces behind Amir's actions?

- To win Baba's love
- Using his power as a Pashtun – testing the limits of his relationship with Hassan

As an adult:

Through Baba's death Amir no longer sees himself as "Baba's son" and can take responsibility for his actions. Amir can redeem himself through rescuing Sohrab and this brings its own reward by helping Amir's personal development.

Why do the major changes occur in Amir so late in his life?

It may be that the image he has of his father as "Tophan Agha, or 'Mr. Hurricane'"; a figure of mythic proportions has to be challenged and debunked before he is able to discover his own value.
