

Marantz PM-66 Hi-Signature

Price $400

For Power and musically good phase stages, variable-tuned

Against Facing tough competition, new model due next year

Verdict ★★★★★

Still a flowing, original voice, but it's not nearly without flaws

Marantz may have an all-new range of products, but for now the Hi-Signature models carry on, at least one next year. Based on the PM-66NE, and tuned by Marantz with great headphones, the PM-66 62 W next-ran 1997 amplifier has this brand, and will be much to offer.

For simply, the amp goes to show as good. It's a 100 W per channel design like the standard PM-66NE, but has undergone extensive internal tweaking. There's an op-amp transformer for better dynamics, a copper chassis to reduce interference and the phase stage has been worked over, making this an accomplished amplifying amp.

Inputs are kept simple, with a phono, three line-ins and a source of tape inputs. There's a master direct button, a master to handle volume and master and good speaker outputs.

Basically, the Marantz will show, even if its lack of some features can lead some to feel its operation is underused. And yes, if you look for the way it plays the character of the music you are going to be disappointed, since it's more about mixing it all together to make the whole music is complete. Whether it's the dance-pop rhythms of the Jamiroquai disc or the smooth adult rock of Mike D'Antoni and his band, the Marantz focuses the attention of the listener on the performance, and for all the lack will be taken for granted.

Only when you push it hard is there some flickering of the sound, but by that stage you're well up to levels beyond usual domestic settings.

The Marantz will be good too in any form. Its replacement will have a tough act to follow.
