Figure 1 depicts the study design. The first part of the study was a 10-week pretest period during which the researchers collected data on the baseline level of the dependent variables. The second part of the study was a 10-week intervention period during which the researchers collected data on the dependent variables. The third part of the study was a 10-week follow-up period during which the researchers collected data on the dependent variables.

1. The number of people who are not in the sample is 100 - 50 = 50.

Figure 2. Effect of temperature on the rate of sorption of water vapor by polypropylene. The sorption was measured at 100% relative humidity and 1 atm. The data were fitted to the sigmoidal equation: $y = \frac{a}{1 + e^{-bx}}$, where y is the weight gain, x is time, a is the equilibrium weight gain, and b is the rate constant. The values of a and b are given in Table 1.

Abstract: While a number of studies suggest that the use of the Internet for health information seeking is increasing, little is known about the factors that influence the use of the Internet for health information seeking. The purpose of this study was to investigate the factors that influence the use of the Internet for health information seeking. A cross-sectional survey of 1,000 adults was conducted. The results of the survey suggest that the use of the Internet for health information seeking is influenced by a number of factors, including age, education, income, and health status. The study also found that the use of the Internet for health information seeking is associated with a number of health outcomes, including increased knowledge, improved health status, and increased use of health services.
