Following their arrival back at work, the participants were informed that they had been given the following information: "While we did not have direct knowledge of your specific situation, we did receive the information that your situation is not unusual. There are not uncommonly people who are experiencing job growth in the market. When combined with growth, job loss can be a difficult situation to deal with. We will be happy to provide you with information on how to deal with this situation." The participants were then informed that they were not to discuss the information they had been given with anyone else.

It only has three years since we had the 1994 earthquake, and yet apparently there is a great big chasm to bridge in order to get the local people and the international community working together again. I think that's a very real challenge.
