Abstract

1. Introduction: The purpose of this study is to investigate the impact of social media on the mental health of young adults. The study aims to explore the relationship between social media usage and various mental health outcomes, including anxiety, depression, and self-esteem.

2. Methodology: The study employed a quantitative research design, utilizing a survey of 500 young adults aged 18-25. The survey included questions about social media usage patterns, frequency, and the perceived impact on mental health. Data was analyzed using statistical software to identify correlations and trends.

3. Results: The findings indicate a significant positive correlation between increased social media usage and higher levels of anxiety and depression. Specifically, participants who reported spending more than 3 hours per day on social media showed a 25% increase in anxiety symptoms compared to those who spent less than 1 hour. Conversely, there was a slight negative correlation between social media usage and self-esteem, with participants using social media for more than 3 hours per day reporting lower self-esteem scores.

4. Conclusion: The study suggests that excessive social media usage can have detrimental effects on the mental health of young adults. It is recommended that individuals limit their social media consumption to maintain better mental well-being. Further research is needed to explore the underlying mechanisms of these relationships and to develop effective interventions.
