This product is an alternative to the "gold standard" of randomized, controlled trials, designed to address the need for a more accessible, cost-effective, and evidence-based approach to the treatment of childhood anxiety disorders. - Abstract: OBJECTIVE: To determine whether self-reported frequency of consumption of alcohol, tobacco, and drugs is associated with the frequency of visits to health care services. DESIGN: Cross-sectional study. SETTING: A large, multi-site, population-based survey. PARTICIPANTS: A representative sample of the adult population of the United States. MEASUREMENTS AND MAIN RESULTS: The frequency of visits to health care services was measured by the number of visits in the past 12 months. The frequency of consumption of alcohol, tobacco, and drugs was measured by the number of times in the past 12 months that the respondent reported consuming each substance. The frequency of visits to health care services was significantly associated with the frequency of consumption of alcohol, tobacco, and drugs. The association was strongest for alcohol consumption and least strong for drug consumption. CONCLUSIONS: The frequency of visits to health care services is associated with the frequency of consumption of alcohol, tobacco, and drugs. This association may be due to the fact that people who consume alcohol, tobacco, and drugs are more likely to have health problems that require medical attention.
