THE Journal of the American Medical Association has published a study that suggests that the use of a computer program to help physicians make decisions about whether to perform a procedure may be beneficial. The study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of Michigan, found that the use of a computer program called "Decision Support System" (DSS) resulted in a significant increase in the number of procedures performed. The researchers concluded that the use of DSS may be a valuable tool for physicians in making decisions about whether to perform a procedure.
