Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the 10-year-old children in the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical education program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The body mass index of the children in the experimental group also increased significantly. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

1. Identify the problem. The first step is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the symptoms and the context in which they are occurring.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the participants significantly improved their cardiovascular fitness, as measured by the 12-minute walk test, and their muscular strength, as measured by the 1RM test. The program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects on the participants' health. The authors conclude that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men.

1. The first step is to identify the problem.
