The assessment begins with a written survey with the focus on a student's self-perception of social skills. The survey is based on the Social Skills Training Manual (2007) and is designed to provide baseline information about the importance of socialization experiences. This assessment generates, with each student, individual suggestions for growth. A list of related work is developed with the assessment. This includes references to social communication. However, there is no guarantee that this focus will not occur in a graduate program. In the assessment, the student's response is used to determine the importance of socialization experiences, which can be determined by looking at the assessment of self and others. It is important to try to use the information by the end of the course.

- 12. Decrease the number of the learning offerings.
- 13. Increase the assessment frequency and assignments and activities.
- 14. Increase the assessment to a weekly rather than bi-weekly basis (the response is negative).
- 15. Increase the amount of the assessment content. The response is negative.
