

Investment Demand

Investment spending consists of spending on new buildings, machinery, plant and equipment. Investment spending is a part of total spending or aggregate expenditures. Any increase in investment spending would necessarily increase total spending or aggregate expenditures.

Decisions on investment spending are based on a comparison of marginal cost and marginal benefit: If you expect a particular project to yield a greater benefit than cost, you will undertake it. One of the costs associated with investment spending is the interest expense on borrowed money to engage in the project.

Part A

- Figure 22.1 lists the expected cost of various projects and the associated expected benefit. Fill in the decision column with Yes if you would undertake the project and No if you would not. The first example has been completed for you.

- If interest rates fell and the cost associated with the project fell by $15 at each level, indicate in Figure 22.2 which projects you would undertake. The first example has been completed for you.
