

Chapter 1

The Human Reproductive System

Have you ever wondered how a new human being develops inside the female body? As you proceed with the lessons in this unit, you will be amazed to find out that life starts out as a fertilized cell. This cell is the result of the union of the male and female sex cells.

Lesson 1

The Male and the Female Reproductive Systems

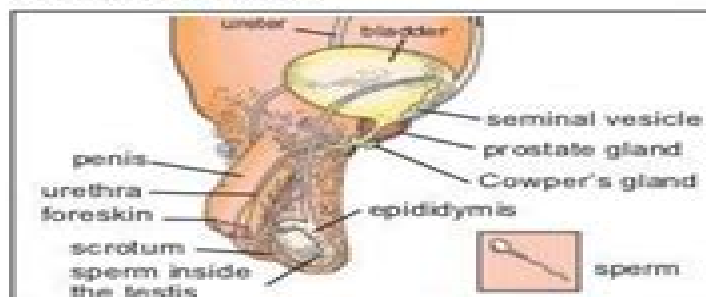

Find Out

1. What are the parts of the male and the female reproductive systems?
2. What are the functions of each part?

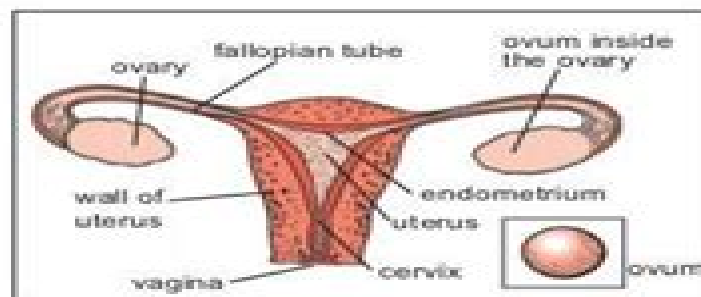

Humans, being living things, are able to reproduce offspring of their own kind. No two offspring, however, are the same. The ability of humans to reproduce ensures their continued existence on Earth.

Humans have body parts called organs that enable us to reproduce. These organs have coordinated functions that form a body system, called the reproductive system. In this lesson, you will learn about the structures of the reproductive organs and their specific functions.

The reproductive system of males differs from that of females. Look at the two illustrations below.
