Snow-What?

Snow is a type of precipitation that falls from the ground down clouds. It is formed when water vapor condenses into tiny droplets that freeze together. The freezing process may be triggered when the falling drops of water hit the surrounding falling air molecules.

Snowflakes are made when water droplets freeze on a surface and then grow into larger, more complex shapes. The crystals form the nuclei of different types of ice. The structure of the snowflake is determined by the temperature and humidity of the air.

Snowflakes are small enough to see with the naked eye, although some are large enough to see with a microscope. They are made of different types of ice. The structure of the snowflake is determined by the temperature and humidity of the air.

It is not as cold when the temperature drops to -1°C (32°F) as it is when it drops to -2°C (28°F). The difference is small, but it is enough to make a difference in the way the snowflakes form.

When the temperature drops to -1°C (32°F), the snowflakes are small and simple. When the temperature drops to -2°C (28°F), the snowflakes are larger and more complex.

The snowflakes are made of water droplets that freeze together. The freezing process may be triggered when the falling drops of water hit the surrounding falling air molecules.
