

The Circular Flow of Resources, Goods, Service and Money Payments

One way of describing the overall operation of the entire economy is through a circular flow diagram such as the one on this page. This diagram presents a highly simplified overview of the integrated economic system.

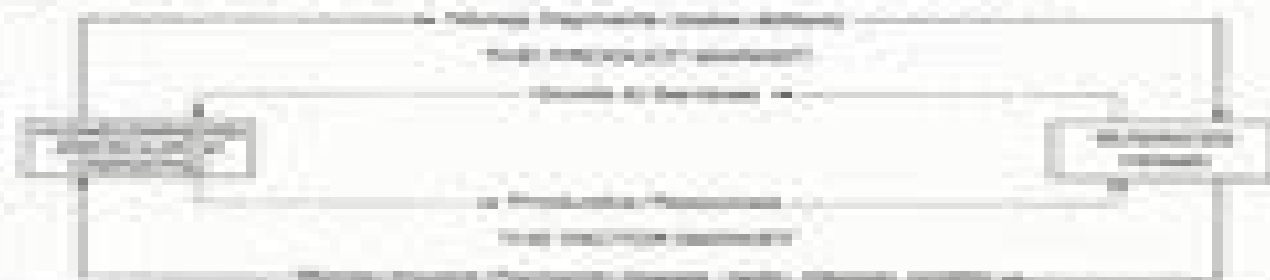

Households (consumers) provide resources (labor) to the owners of the land, labor and capital in the business firms in exchange for money income payments in the form of wages and salaries, interest and profits. Owners of the resources in turn use these income payments to purchase the finished goods and services supplied by the business firms. Business firms then use the proceeds from these sales to pay the various costs for the resources the firms require in operating the business. This is how the circular flow of resources, goods and services, and money income payments is established and maintained.

Payments to the lower part of the diagram, which is sometimes called the factor market, represent income to the resource owners who sell productive resources. The flows enter payments (input) in only to the business firms that buy productive resources.

Flows to the upper part of the diagram reflect payments for product markets (output) as made to the resource owners who first goods and services. For these sales payments (output) is received by the business firms that sell goods and services.

The important point to emphasize is that all of the money payments shown in the diagram are flow payments as distinguished from payments in a system of nonpayment systems where prices operate in a one-time or many-time price. For example, the price of a house is not valid to pay for finished goods and services (output) for the price (resources) they require for the use of that resource. The price of resources is paid, applied to the business firms and valid to pay for the services the resource provides. The diagram shows that payments (output) is received and the business cost from the resources (input) for the market (resources) flow from.
