The Integration of Females Into Male-oriented Jobs Herbert Henry Meyer,1976 Detailed information was obtained from ten utility companies and 386 individuals in those companies regarding their experiences with the integration of women into traditionally male jobs The results showed that efforts to employ women in such jobs were predominantly positive The great majority of the women were performing the jobs in a very satisfactory manner Women in blue collar types of jobs were likely to have more difficulties in adjusting to and performing well the male oriented jobs than were women in professional or managerial jobs This was due to some extent to resistance on the part of the men to the idea of employing women in some of these jobs Resistance sometimes were strong enough to make it difficult for the women to succeed However in the majority of situations resistance on the part of men to the movement of women into male oriented jobs generally disappeared when they found that women could perform the jobs well A number of insights were gained and recommendations made with regard to actions that can be taken by organizations of all kinds to facilitate the integration of women into jobs that have been held almost exclusively by men in the past Among the most central staff person or group in the organizations were that 1 the program must be monitored by an influential central staff person or group in the organization 2 it must have strong backing from key executives and 3 special recruiting selection training and follow up programs are often necessary to maximize the success of integration efforts The Jewel Jewel Tea Company,1923 Steam Shovel and Dredge ,1916
