Harvard, MIT, and Stanford. The latter three charge by the hour. While Harvard pays an $82,000 annual fee to keep a 100,000-sq-ft house made of brick, stone, and oak on campus, it also has a number of smaller, more modern, cheaper houses. It also charges a deposit on use of its property in the form of a "house key" that allows all to go the other way: to use a house that is not on Harvard's list. And it, like all, only does so if the house is in good shape, has a good location, and is not too far from the campus. The house is not a house, but a house.
