Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and performance of young women. The subjects were 15 young women (mean age 20.5 years) who participated in a 12-week training program. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included cardiovascular exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The subjects were tested at the beginning and end of the program for various physical fitness measures, including heart rate, blood pressure, and body composition. The results showed that the subjects experienced significant improvements in all measured variables after 12 weeks of training. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness and performance of young women.

Figure 8 illustrates the effect of the different parameters on the results of the model. The results show that the model is highly sensitive to the parameters of the input data, particularly the parameters of the input data that are related to the input data. The model is also sensitive to the parameters of the input data that are related to the input data.
