Gods, Men, and Territory Anne Vergati, 2002 The Newars who live in the Kathmandu Valley of Nepal are well known for their urban civilisation as well as for the social organisation of their territory which they have conserved for centuries The author shows that for the Newars there exists a complex relationship between gods and men and also that their notion of territory is inextricably linked with the sanctuaries and temples where gods have precise sites Even though political power has always been in the hands of the Hindus the co-existence of Hinduism and Buddhism since the fifth century and the influence of Tantrism later on has given rise to a complex pantheon The sanctuaries and temples are not merely decorative they are functional as well Each festival takes place around a temple and these mark out the territory the Newars inhabit The Newar town not only has a religious centre but a political centre as well For instance at Bhaktapur the royal goddess Taleju is the political figure head and the goddess Tripurasundari the religious figure head The royal goddess Taleju being the sovereign deity of the town it is obvious that the political centre has primacy over the religious centre The seats of the deities within a territory are situated in concentric circles Published in association with Centre de Sciences Humaines New Delhi International Dictionary of Historic Places: Asia and Oceania Trudy Ring, Robert M.
