In their study on ageism in Hollywood, sociologist Elizabeth M. Markson and psychotherapist Carol A. Taylor explain the relationship between age and gender using Peter Pan as an analogy:

Regardless of the decade, films convey the message that the power and the success of men is likely to continue uninterrupted into old age, unaffected by physical decrements that might alter their ability to manifest action-based, task-oriented 'masculine'

behaviours. Like Peter Pan, they remain youthful to the end – unless they are among the very few unlucky ones. In contrast, Wendy-like, females grow up – and grow old – often to become tedious, timid or termagant. (156)
