PARTICLE THEORY AND STATES OF MATTER

What is the arrangement of particles in each state of matter? What is the change of state called? Can you give examples of substances that can do this?

Particle Theory is the theory that all matter is made up of tiny particles. These particles have different properties of matter. Some particles are smaller and some are larger. They are held together by forces of attraction. The arrangement of particles in each state of matter is different. Some particles are held together more tightly than others. Some particles are held together less tightly than others.

States of Matter There are three states of matter: solid, liquid, and gas. Each state has different properties. Solids have a fixed shape and volume. Liquids have a fixed volume but no fixed shape. Gases have no fixed shape or volume.

Changes of State A change of state is a process in which a substance changes from one state of matter to another. Examples of changes of state are melting, boiling, and condensation. These changes are caused by changes in temperature or pressure.

Particle Arrangement The particles in a solid are packed closely together. In a liquid, they are more spread out. In a gas, they are very far apart. The forces of attraction between particles are strongest in a solid and weakest in a gas.

Energy and Changes of State Changes of state involve the absorption or release of energy. For example, melting requires energy to break the forces of attraction between particles. Boiling requires energy to overcome the forces of attraction between particles and turn them into a gas.
